VIRGINIA TECH PUBLISHING

Our Values

Virginia Tech Publishing started in 2017 but our history is rooted in a much deeper tradition. In 1989 the Scholarly Communication Project was established in Virginia Tech's Newman Library as a place to experiment with the technology to produce online scholarship in new and developing formats. In 2013-2014, Virginia Tech played a leading role in advancing the idea of a community dedicated to the field of library publishing, which resulted in the creation of the Library Publishing Coalition. In the years since then, the Library has continued to embrace the increasingly diverse products of research and scholarship, especially those that are more than just "paper online," including e-journals, interactive books, open educational resources, innovative digital projects, and audio visual materials.

In keeping with Virginia Tech's land grant mission, we believe in contributing the works we publish to the public commons through open access publishing while ensuring long-term access through the Library's preservation strategy. Our goal is to be the center of scholarly publishing activities and expertise at Virginia Tech and to raise the profile of VT scholarship.

A screenshot of the website for the journal "Studies in Engineering Education". The website has a dark grey header with navigation links: Home, About, Contact, Content, and Research Integrity. A search bar is on the right. Below the header is a banner with the journal's title "STUDIES IN ENGINEERING EDUCATION" and a circular logo. Below the banner are links to "Follow on Twitter" and "Follow Via RSS". The main content area has a section titled "About this Journal" which describes the journal's focus on engineering education research. To the right is a sidebar with a "CONVERSATIONS" section featuring a tweet from the journal's Twitter account. The bottom of the page shows a large orange and grey graphic.

The American Soldier project led by Professor Ed Gitre in the Department of History allows users to browse and search over 65,000 pages of uncensored, open-ended responses handwritten by servicemembers, view and download survey data and original analyses, read topical essays by leading historians, and access additional learning resources. The project began in 2015, in 2017 it received a National Endowment for the Humanities Division of Preservation and Access planning grant, and a second implementation NEH grant in 2019. The project launched in 2021 with support from many collaborators, including Virginia Tech University Libraries and Virginia Tech Publishing.

The screenshot displays the Virginia Tech Publishing website. At the top, a navigation bar includes links for Home, About, Publications, Contact Us, and Research Integrity, along with a search bar. The main header features the Virginia Tech Publishing logo and buttons for 'Join Mailing List' and 'Publish with Us'. The central focus is the 'Vox Humanities' podcast, with the tagline 'PODCASTS FROM THE CENTER FOR HUMANITIES AT VIRGINIA TECH'. A descriptive paragraph states: 'Vox Humanities is a podcast focused on the advancement of human centered knowledge, pursued in conversation with experts whose work enhances public understanding of a complex world.' Below this, a 'Recent Activity' section provides a welcome message and details about the university's digital-first publishing mission. A social media widget for Virginia Tech Publishing (@VirginiaTechPub) is also visible, featuring a tweet about a new podcast episode, 'Community Policing in Nigeria', and a 'COMMUNITY' button.
